

Hidden Stories: International Seminar of Women in Korean History

Call for Papers:

The Pompeu Fabra University and Entremons Journal of World History, in association with the SOAS Center of Korean Studies are pleased to host the International Seminar of Women in Korean History in Barcelona, Catalonia, Spain. The seminar will be held all day September 8th 2026, as an introduction of upcoming research focusing on women throughout Korean history and the humanities.

The seminar aims to showcase the research of international graduate students and early-career researchers from all disciplines whose research incorporates women in Korea related topics. The seminar will also include a roundtable discussion with Dr Antonio Doménech (University of Málaga) and Dr Barbara Wall (University of Copenhagen).

The goal of the seminar is to encourage young scholars to build networks and provide a supportive environment for sharing research. We particularly welcome applicants whose research relates to Korean history covering premodern, modern and contemporary history and society topics, with a special interest in women's history. We also accept proposals focused on the humanities, including literature.

Participants may have the opportunity to publish with the Entremons Journal of World History in the future.

Eligibility:

The seminar welcomes submissions from PhD students and Early Career Researchers globally, with specific encouragement to students from European universities.

Funding:

Unfortunately the committee is unable to provide financial support to participants, therefore we encourage the application of participants who are able to receive support from their home institutions. In person participation is encouraged, however, this event will be held hybrid therefore the option for online participation is possible.

Submission Guidelines:

Please submit an abstract of 300-400 words and a CV to koreanhistoryseminar@gmail.com by May 1st 2026.

Notification of acceptance will be sent by the end of June.
